

LAURENTIAN ENGINEERING STUDENT INSPIRED BY LOCKERBY COMPOSITE

Second-year Laurentian University mechanical engineering student Harsh Brahmbhatt said it's partly thanks to Lockerby Composite and Hatch Engineering that he's studying engineering. Brahmbhatt said he came to Canada from India at the age of 17, with the idea that he'd like to become an engineer (although he says he didn't know why). He enrolled in Lockerby Composite School's mining major program.

"It gives opportunity for a tech class to design a mine and go in front of Hatch engineers and present it," Brahmbhatt said. "It was one of the best experiences of my life, to be a 17-year-old, to present in front of a group of professional engineers, and get invaluable feedback. "That stays with you for the rest of your engineering career. That's one of the days that inspired me to say 'Yes, I want to do engineering, and I will do it right here.'"

YOUNG WORKER AWARENESS PROGRAM

Lockerby's Cooperative Education class welcomed Chris Hein from the Young Worker Awareness Program on Tuesday morning. Chris provided a full morning presentation about youth health and safety at work and had the students engaged the whole time. The students heard about how likely an accident is to occur while at work and how to think about the right questions to ask about the tasks they are given. Chris gave real true examples and personal stories of accidents in the workplace, focussing on youth and the young worker. The shock and awe of the presentation opened many eyes to the dangers that a new worker faces. Our Cooperative education students start their new placements next Tuesday and hope to take what they have learned with them and be safe on the job.

SMALL ENGINES AT LOCKERBY COMPOSITE

Driving your sled to school only makes sense if you live in Nunavut, or if you are taking a Small Engines course at Lockerby Composite. This week, Matt braved freezing temperatures and a 50 km/h speed limit on the OFSC trails to bring his sled to school. The class was treated to a discussion about all the engineering and innovations that are part of the new line-up from Skidoo. Students also talked about licensing, insurance, and responsible ridership on the trail plan.

Students of any grade are welcome to register for Small Engines at Lockerby Composite. You can earn both a grade 11 and a grade 12 credit learning about how engines work, and practicing your use of tools. These courses are essential for anyone considering a career in the trades, engineering, or for those who just want to be a little handier at fixing their own equipment. See you in the shop!
